Educación No Es Tan Difícil Como Creemos (Nexos) María Jesús Comellas

Why do some parents feel insecure with the responsibility of educating their children? Are they unsure about what to teach, what values to instill, or how to hold their kids accountable? Psychologist María Jesús Comellas intends to restore confidence to parents by sharing a simple point: We educate at every moment--from when the alarm clock rings in the morning and we greet our kids with a -good morning- or -come on, hurry up- up until the night comes. She argues that because family is the center of affection and love, it has the authority to teach children how to live a good life.
